

HAARP Triggering Ancient Pyramid Energy

July 05, 2012

Image from The Giza Power Plant — Christopher Dunn

Join my Twitter feed | Like my Facebook page

HAARP: in some circles the name's become synonymous with intrigue. Determined investigators, delving deeply into the permutations of power the globally expanding high frequency radio installations wield, claim that HAARP (High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program) can create weather, steer massive storms, ignite mighty volcanoes, and trigger devastating earthquakes. Some, like physicist Dr. Fran De Aquino, have uncovered evidence that the project far exceeds the study and manipulation of the Earth's ionosphere, and may actually affect gravity and time.

Researcher Mike Hagan has found startling evidence HAARP may be more insidious than most investigators think. Hagan's discovered incredible evidence that, while the masters of HAARP may be doing everything investigators suspect, they've also embarked on a mind-boggling project designed to power-up and control the unknown ancient powers locked inside some of the world's greatest pyramids...a tremendous power that could enable the controllers of advanced Tesla technology to reach out, grab the world by its collective throat, and shake it into submission.

Pyramids: massive powerplants

More than one researcher, including some electrical engineers, have made the case that some of the more ancient pyramids are actually gigantic machines that generate power. Some have even built models that prove their contention that pyramidal structures are natural reservoirs of energy and can act as huge capacitors and generators of electricity.

Among the first to propose the theory was Christopher Dunn. He introduced the theory to the world with his article Advanced Machining in Ancient Egypt that revealed machining techniques far more sophisticated than most orthodox Egyptologists realized.

Explorer, researcher and author, Christopher Dunn

After that landmark article, Dunn went on to publish many articles expanding his theory until he published the breakthrough book, The Giza Power Plant: Technologies of Ancient Egypt. [\[Video\]](#)

Dunn's book caused instant controversy, although it intrigued many scientists. While his perspective on ancient technology was dramatic, it was also testable.

A pyramid power generator prototype

One such model was built by an engineer from Austria named Trawöger. When scaled up to sizes equaling large pyramids found around the world the power increases exponentially and could produce gigawatts, or the equivalent of small nuclear reactors without the risks. Pyramids may be the ultimate "green energy" power source.

Video demonstration of how pyramids generate electrical power:

Evidence exists that some of the energy that accumulates within pyramids may be hyperdimensional in nature. Some researchers suspect that pyramid energy vortices are creating torsion fields and generating scalar waves.

Mayan pyramid shoots beam See [World's Pyramids Beaming Energy]

Area 51 energy pyramid See: [Area 51's Massive Alien Pyramid]

If so, directed HAARP scalar waves can intensify a pyramid's power and vastly increase the release of torsion field energy.

HAARP: scalar waves and hyperdimensional torsion fields

Dr. Aurelie Laurence notes: "The term scalar was used by Nikola Tesla at the end of the last century as a part of powerful non-Hertzian energy (without frequencies) which he referred to as cosmic waves. Einstein gave reference to the scalar energies in the 1920's."

Scalar waves were first identified during the 19th Century by James Maxwell. Although Maxwell's mathematics revealing the association between magnetic attraction and electrical force created the entire basis for what later grew into modern physics, many other scientists dismissed the evidence for scalar waves because they could not be detected.

As physicists concentrated on electricity and magnetism, Maxwell's scalar waves were tossed into the dust bin as mysticism. But decades later a genius found physical evidence that Maxwell was correct. That genius was Nicola Tesla.

Computer image of scalar standing waves

The already famous inventor, who had a slew of basic patents under his belt, discovered that scalar waves were generated when high-voltage direct current was abruptly interrupted. Tesla discovered scalar waves propagated from the electromagnetic currents being studied by Heinrich Hertz—another scientist who had shrugged off Maxwell's scalar wave math as unprovable nonsense.

Investigating the history of Tesla and scalar waves, researcher Christi Verismo writes: "By 1904, Tesla had developed transmitters to harness scalar energy from one transmitter to another, undetectedly bypassing time and space. He could just materialize it from one place to another through hyperspace, without the use of wires, it was just sucked right out of the space-time/vacuum and into a transmitter and into a beam which could be targeted to another transmitter."

This was the revolutionary breakthrough that Tesla called broadcast power.

"Crossing the beams can create what some researchers of the waves term a Tesla globe. This energy sphere can be used to manipulate other forms of energy as well as matter." The Tesla globe energy field is the electromagnetic effect that is behind the power that some researchers claim is being tested by the HAARP complexes appearing across the world.

Tesla's early research also generated torsion fields. Although electromagnetic scalar-directed torsion fields are considered science fiction or pseudoscience by many physicists, some of Tesla's technology worked to harness this "mysticism" and no less than Albert Einstein's math also supports the existence of both phenomena.

Many articles have been written about torsion fields and a partial list can be viewed here.

Torsion field illustration [Image: Enterprise Mission]

The hypderdimensionality aspect that some like Richard C. Hoagland promote, seems to have more fact than fantasy underlying the hypothesis. Tesla used it for broadcast power applications and to create and direct his infamous "death ray."

Another Tesla researcher who's captured the attention of many Western governments—and the U.S. military—is John Hutchinson. The Canadian technologist created what's known as the "Hutchinson Effect" that demonstrates powerful Telsa technology can be used to create energy storms, trigger high energy bombs, achieve amazing anti-gravity effects, and transmute matter.

The Hutchison effect: Steel cylinder turns to jelly

Hutchinson admits that his high energy electromagnetic experiments are resulting in phenomena that is outside the current theories of physics, but the influence of scalar waves and hyperdimensional torsion field effects seems undeniable.

Researcher Lt. Colonel Thomas E. Bearden (retd.) is a PhD who's devoted years of his life investigating the properties and propagation of electromagnetic fields and scalar technology by the United States and Russia. Bearden has come to the conclusion that the largest military forces of the world are involved in scalar wars.

Dangers beneath the sea

The world's pyramids, especially the ancient ones that may be energy accumulators and advanced power stations, are scattered all over the world on every continent except Australia and Antarctica--although author Rex Gilroy claims a lost civilization called the 'Uru' built a

pyramid in Australia that still exists, and allegedly a pyramid exists in the Antarctic buried beneath one mile of ice.

Like the vestiges of undersea cities, undersea pyramids exist. Some have been located off the coast of Japan, under the waters of the Caribbean, in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, and at the bottom of the Atlantic by ocean explorer Tony Benik. Who built these mysterious pyramids and how did they come to be on the bottom of the ocean floor?

No one knows for sure.

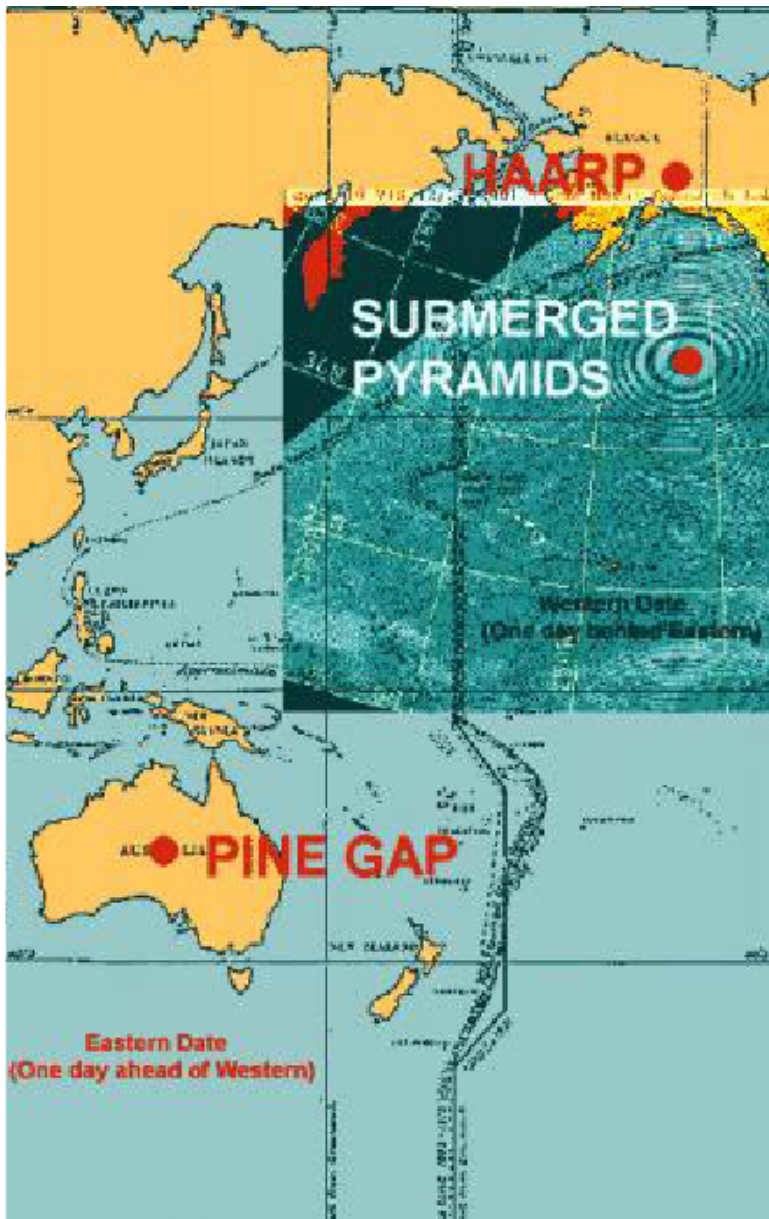

The three Pacific Ocean pyramids compared to those in Egypt [Image: Mike Hagan]

Magnification of three submerged Pacific pyramids [Image: Mike Hagan]

Three pyramids, deep under the Pacific Ocean, and curiously aligned like those at Giza, were researched by Mike Hagan after he found evidence that HAARP scalar wave technology was activating the pyramids and triggering their dormant torsion fields.

[Image: Mike Hagan]

Telltale HAARP scalar wave rings [Image: Mike Hagan]

[Image: Mike Hagan]

Three ancient pyramids [Image: Mike Hagan]

Close-up of HAARP scalar wave rings and pyramids [Image: Mike Hagan]

HAARP: masters of the ancient power?

Mike Hagan's discovery led him to incredible evidence that HAARP is conducting potentially dangerous experiments attempting to activate ancient technology that scientists think they can control.

Mike notes: "Look closely at the Pacific pyramid alignments and the structures within. When looking at the full-sized maps you will notice that there is a wee structure to the SE, the actual third pyramid similar to Menkaure..."

But the pyramid technology is ancient and may be based on physics from 50,000 years ago that today's science can only guess at.

Unleashing the torsion field genes trapped inside the sleeping pyramids may unleash cascading events that could eventually prove uncontrollable.

Chinese professors think pyramid may be alien

Some of the pyramids—such as the massive and mysterious Xianyang pyramid near the apex of Mount Baigong in the western province of Qinghai, China—may have alien origins.

The ancient pyramid network—stretching across continents and some built on land now far under the sea—could be all that remains of an incredibly old global broadcast power grid engineered to accumulate energy and release it on demand as Nicola Tesla once did.

Could the release of hyperdimensional torsion fields by those supercivilizations have also released unimaginable and eventually uncontrollable forces that contributed to the fall of those civilizations? Perhaps.

If true, then embarking on a project to reawaken them without full knowledge of exactly how they work and what their limits of power might be is a fools' errand.

The would-be HAARP masters of ancient technology might instead find themselves the victims of it. Instead of accessing the secrets of the ancients and acquiring limitless power, they could be releasing relentless demons.

And then the gates of hell could be flung wide open and chaos rule the Earth.